hand-woven for the Season

Weave Him

He's made of willow & wicker.
So make him of what matters.

Order for one husband

When you've had a terrible day, he...

- Brings me coffee without asking
- Lets me vent. No fixing.
- Orders takeout, picks the movie
- Just holds me. No words.

Or, spin your own thread

He...

There's no box for height on this form.
That's rather the point.

Your husband so far — II of VII strands

Tune his temperament

slide the woven heart along the thread

When you're out together

Quiet company — Constant banter

He'll narrate the entire grocery run.

How he shows his love

Small daily rituals — Grand gestures

Coffee on the nightstand, every single morning.

With him, you feel

Safe and steady — Swept off your feet

Steady hands, and a little mischief.

Your commission is ready

Seven strands. Not one of them about his biceps.

His vows · No. [0417]

dearest reader, he promises...

I. I'll have your coffee ready before you remember you need it.

II. I'll let you vent, and I won't fix it unless you ask.

III. I'll laugh at the joke. Even the third time.

IV. I'll remember your mom's birthday, and I'll call her.

V. I'll always leave the porch light on.

Yours, woven by hand,

Rowan

Cormorant Garamond + EB Garamond · text

An 1800s basketmaker's workshop dressed for the Season: parchment and sepia ink, faded garden florals, antique gold rules and a wax seal. Weaving runs through everything: lattice, wicker hearts, stitching and thread. Romantic, never cute.
